

Additional Resources For Using Photography and Propaganda Imagery To Teach World War I

A wonderful interactive visual history of the Great War created by the American Battle Monuments Commission.

http://www.abmc.gov/sites/default/files/interactive/interactive\_files/WW1/index.html

Photographs and excerpts from letters of an American doughboy from Meuse-Argonne Offensive. <http://worldwar1letters.wordpress.com/the-adventure-unfolds/over-there-1918-1919/meuse-argonne-offensive-oct-nov-1918/>

“Never Before Published World War I Photographs” by an unknown photographer reveal life in the trenches. <http://www.nbcnews.com/news/world/never-published-world-war-one-photographs-revealed-n114421>

Great coverage of World War I with images, audio, interactive guides, and many other great tools to teach about the Great War from a global perspective. <http://www.bbc.com/ww1>

An article on World War I and its link to several of the words that we still in use in the English language; it also contains a condensed visual history of the Great War.

<http://www.cnn.com/2014/06/20/opinion/lighter-world-war-i-language/index.html>

“The Great War: Photography on the Western Front” by Caitlin Patrick provides a nice overview of the role photograph played on the Western front.

<http://www.ucd.ie/photoconflict/histories/wwiphotography/>

World War I image archive neatly classifies images and provides basic information about each image. <http://www.gwpda.org/photos/> It is part of the larger World War I Primary Document Archive. <http://www.gwpda.org>

A wonderful collection of 20th century propaganda posters organized by topic. <http://guity-novin.blogspot.com/2010/05/chapter-29-propaganda-posters.html>

LEARN NC has a nice database of World War I propaganda posters with brief descriptions of each poster. <http://www.learnnc.org/lp/editions/ww1posters/>